

Bob's Story: Straight Talk about Erectile Dysfunction Post-Prostatectomy

Did you know that Erectile Dysfunction (ED) is a common side-effect of treating prostate cancer? Nearly 30% of men over 60 will not respond to oral therapies prescribed for Erectile Dysfunction (ED), leaving millions of men looking for an effective solution. Here's Bob's story about his experience with Erectile Dysfunction post-prostatectomy and how the Titan® Inflatable Penile Prosthesis (IPP) restored his sexual livelihood.

Meet Bob.

"I developed ED Post Prostatectomy in February, 2004. I was 65 and had never had a prior history of ED. I studied the literature and attended ED Seminars for several years and finally got to speak with two men who had the Coloplast Titan Penile Implant procedure done. This convinced me to move forward and I had my Titan Penile Implant Procedure done three weeks later. In retrospect, this proved to be one of the best decisions I have made. It truly "gave me my life back"; just as the two men I spoke with had said it would, and also restored emotional intimacy with my wife."

What is Titan®?

The Titan inflatable penile implant is a self-contained, fluid-filled system that is made from Bioflex® and silicone. It is designed to emulate the look and performance of a natural erection. It is concealed entirely within the body and is not visible to the naked eye.
