

ven if she were 51, Christie Brinkiey would look young for her age. So how is it that at 61 the supermodel is practically as fresh-faced as she was over 20 years ago? Christie cops to a couple of the reasons in her new book, Timeless Beauty, saying Botox "worked wonders" on the vertical lines on her neck and fillers diminished the marionette lines around her mouth. But, experts say, those tweaks are just the tip of the iceberg in the Uptown Girl's regimen to stay camera-ready. "She's a testimonial to great heredity and great maintenance," notes Dr. Richard Ellenbogen, a Beverly Hills plastic surgeon who hasn't treated Christie. "And she did it correctly, having small procedures all her life, so she never looked like a new person." Besides Botox in her forehead and around her eyes, Dr. Ellenbogen says he sees evidence of "perfectly placed" fillers in her lower eyelids, temples, cheeks, nasal-labial lines and lips. He thinks the CoverGirl beauty may have also had an eye-lift, apossible brow-lift and even a face-lift. No matter the specifics, Dr. David Bank, a cosmetic dermatologist in Mount Kisco, N.Y. (who likewise doesn't call the star a patient), agrees that Christie's plan for staying forever young was model-perfect: "She maintains the natural, youthful appearance of one of the most beoutiful women in the world." Let