drunken bridesmaid? The culprit could be fluctuations in estrogen, says David Bank, an assistant clinical professor of dermatology at Columbia University/Presbyterian Hospital. The hormone increases nitric oxide in the body, which causes blood vessels in the face to dilate. And while no clear link has been established between hormone changes and rosacea, many women with the skin condition report that redness is more severe in the middle of their menstrual cycle, when ovulation puts estrogen levels at their highest. For younger women, the Pill may help control flushing. For perimenopausal women who have flushing and hot flashes, a very low dose of estrogen sometimes smooths out hormone levels-and the
